

"From his decades of unswerving dedication to justice and peace David Burgess has distilled the highlights of his service to the poor, progressive politics, and to his God. An extremely rich and rewarding autobiography of a remarkable man."

—James MacGregor Burns, professor emeritus, Williams College

"David Burgess has given us a superbly worded, clearly organized, authentic personal account of his ethically stimulated and vigorously led life of public service—service while a sensitive student, and then as a political activist and labor organizer, as a Christian minister and United States Foreign Service official, and as a versatile striver toward a better life for all people."

—Alexander Heard, chancellor emeritus, Vanderbilt University

"Fighting for Social Justice provides us with a new way to understand the history of social activism from the 1930s to the 1980s . . . Fighting for Social Justice will help students, historians, and the general reader to get a sense of the cohesiveness of American left-liberal reform in the mid-twentieth century."

—Tracy E. K'Meyer, University of Louisville

"David Burgess represents the very best of Christian social activism in our time. In these days, when some among us have so much and so many so little and when a commitment to progressive social change is at such a low ebb, David's honest and well-told story is a source of both inspiration and instruction. It deserves to be read by all those who desire an inside view of the history of vigorous social activism over seven decades as well as those committed to building a more just and caring society in the immediate years ahead."

—Paul H. Sherry, former President, the United Church of Christ and Public Policy Consultant, Office for Church and Society, UCC

"A fascinating life story of a rank and file U. S. worker and strong family man, who projected U. S. Democracy to the grass roots of distant lands and foreign cultures! Its vibrant text and captivating personal photos will inspire all who open its pages."

—Victor G. Reuther, former Assistant to the President of the United Auto Workers
